

First County Bank promotes Corsello to assistant VP

Patricia Corsello, manager of administrative services at First County Bank, was recently promoted to assistant vice president and assistant security officer.

Corsello's primary responsibilities at First County Bank are to oversee and maintain all bank facilities, all legal process of service, branch construction and renovations, purchasing/distribution and records retention. The Stamford resident joined First County Bank in 2001 as supervisor of administrative services and worked as such until her promotion to assistant treasurer in June 2004 and then department manager last November.

"Pat's background working with real estate developers, architects and designers, and having worked as a paralegal for 20 years, has given her invaluable experience for her current position at First County Bank," said Rey Giallongo, executive vice president at First County Bank. "Last year we opened a brand new branch at 700 Connecticut Ave. and Pat's background and contacts in the area made the process a smooth one for the bank. In fact, during the last nine years, Pat has coordinated and successfully supervised the construction of five new branches and the renovation of seven branches in our system," concluded Giallongo.

She earned a diploma from the New York School of Interior Design and later earned a diploma from the Connecticut School of Finance and Management. Corsello lives in Stamford with her four sons.
